JUNIOR RECEPTION

This evening occurs the annual junior reception for the senior class of the High School, to be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ainsley. Invitations have been issued to the High School, the alumni, the faculty and a few friends of the upper classes. The beautiful and extensive grounds will be utilized and the favored ones are anticipating a social treat.

IMPROVEMENT CLUB

At the meeting of the Campbell Improvement Club Friday evening, the matter of speeding on Campbell avenue was discussed at length. In as-much as most of this reckless riding is done by boys of this community it was suggested that something be done to prevent the continuance of the nuisance. The riding of bikes on the sidewalks was also called to the attention of the Club and a ban placed on the practice. A committee will be appointed to represent the club at the Counties' Convention which will be held at San Jose, June 21-22. W. Shelley resigned his position as Secretary of the Club owing to the impossibility for him to give his time to the office during the coming rush season. H. C. Smith was elected for the balance of the year.

Congregational Church

Children's Day next Sunday. This will be at the regular Church hour, 11 A. M. A fine programme has been prepared. The special feature will be "The Building of the Ship" by a number of the boys. The boat will be put together part by part in full view of the audience and with appropriate ceremonies. Other exercises by the little folks and special music. All are most cordially invited to join with us in this service.

The Annual baccalaureate service for the Campbell High School will be at the Congregational Church Sunday night, June 16, 7:30. This will be a Union Meeting. Mr. Atkinson will deliver the address on "The Battle of the Gods". Special Music by the Choir, assisted by the C. U. H. S. Orchestra and Glee Club.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

Next week the twelfth class to graduate from the C. U. H. S. will hold the stage as the center of attraction. The fact that the majority of the Class are boys speaks well for the school, as that is a condition that seldom occurs.

Beginning with the first class of one member in 1901, one hundred thirty-seven young people have received diplomas from this school and stepped into the arena of life. Next Thursday evening fourteen more names will be added to the roll of alumni, Lois Pendleton, Bert Campbell, Lloyd Gardner, Belle Burdick, Howard Bean, Frank Harris, Merna Sawyer, Lawrence Hawkinson, Gilbert Newcomb, Ethel Curry, Clinton Crow, William O'Neil, Helen Hoag, and Clark Waterhouse.

Sunday evening the Baccalaureate Sermon will be delivered by Rev. Atkinson at the Congregational Church. The High School Glee Club and the Orchestra will give several selections in addition to other music.

Tuesday evening will be Class Night with its attendant exercises and ceremonies, and Thursday evening, commencement, both programs to be given in the High School Hall.

Rev. J. B. Orr of Santa Cruz will deliver the commencement address, his subject to be: "Education as Illustrated by Pacific Coast Mountains."

Both faculty and students have labored faithfully to accomplish the work necessary for graduation, and Prof. Smith, who has had the rather unusual pleasure of presenting all of the former classes for commencement, feels well satisfied that the class of 1912 will even surpass the standards set by their predecessors.

FINE ART EXHIBITS

The visitors at the exhibit made by the Art Classes at the High School were much impressed with the class of work done. Although we have seen equally as good results in some city exhibits, they were made by pupils who had had special instructors throughout the grades, and to have accomplished as much in the limited time possible in high school reflects great credit upon the pupils, and their instructor, Miss Chamberlain. The work done is of two kinds; free hand, and mechanical. The former includes drawing from objects, from poses and still life, water color and pastel painting. This year part of the students made desk sets of hammered brass and leather, with very good results.

Another interesting feature was the art note books, made and compiled by each pupil, with cover decorations of original designs—conventionalized flower motifs.

The first year of mechanical drawing is learning the use of the instruments and making plates of each stage of the work when satisfactory. The pupils have a choice for second year, of architectural or machine drawing, and the lessons are very practical.

Altogether the courses are very comprehensive and the results very satisfactory. Teacher and classes must feel well repaid for the efforts expended.

Children's Day

Yes, it is natural for every one to love the little children. And when they have a cute little song to sing or a recitation to give we are all ready to smile and say "well".

You will have a chance to hear some of our own Campbell children render their Annual Children's Day Programme, at the Methodist Sunday School hour, 9:45 on Sunday, June 16.

Maybe you are visiting in town, or maybe you are just moving into our beautiful little village: if so come and let us see you and shake hands, that is the way we get acquainted. I am glad to report that the school is on very good standing in every way but there is much room for those new scholars we expect the first Sunday after Children's Day.

J. C. GORDON, Superintendent.

PROF. RUGH LECTURED

According to previous announcement, Prof. Rugh of Berkeley, spoke to a good audience, Tuesday evening at the M. E. Church, on the subject of Moral Training. He was pleasantly introduced by Prof. J. H. Graves of the Grammar School who was a former classmate of Prof. Rugh's, and in a thoroughly earnest manner, discussed matters that are of vital importance in this generation, and should lie very close to the hearts of all true men and women, showing plainly the great need, and suggesting means of earnest faithful effort in the up-bringing of the youth of today.

A few of his statements were rather sweeping and somewhat difficult of acceptance, but for the most part he had the entire sympathy and concurrence of his hearers. A very enjoyable feature of the evening was the vocal solos rendered by Miss Crawford, with Miss Beattie at the piano.

"OLD MAIDS"

The second appearance here Friday evening of the "Old Maids Association" was quite as good as the first and was given to a good sized house.

A few changes had been made in the personnel of the cast, owing to absence or other causes.

As the "Old Maids" received due praise after their first effort, the rejuvenated members are deserving of more attention this time.

Prof. Makerneau (Carl Beacock) made a fine French professor, and was as excitable and enthusiastic as they are usually pictured.

Miss Pearl Ridley appeared as the Athletic young lady, gracefully wielding a racquet; Ruth Stewart was the elocutionist and gave a selection scoring the "Egg Trust"; Miss Mabel Oliver fulfilled the requirements of the old maid who asked for good looks and pretty clothes; the prima donna was very pleasingly impersonated by one of Mrs. Layton's pupils; the Misses E. and M. Bohman very successfully filled the roles of college girl and artist, respectively; Miss Myrtle Curry gave a very pretty tamboourine dance, and Miss Olva Curry as a nurse would have won the affections of all her patients; while Ethel Curry and Ira Beal as the bride and groom was a much better looking couple than many of the real ones; Mr. Purmort made a fine "Cream of Wheat" Chef, and provoked much mirth with his imitations and comments; and Mrs. Ulrich as the musician gave a very pleasing piano selection.

INTERESTING EXERCISES

The closing exercises of the Grammar School were held yesterday afternoon, the entire school taking part.

Plant Native Trees on State Highway

THE OUTDOOR ART LEAGUE of San Jose, a branch of the American Civic Association, wishes to call the attention of the citizens of California to the probability that extensive tree planting may be contemplated along the borders of the proposed state highway.

We earnestly desire that as far as possible native trees may be used for this purpose, such as oaks, planted at irregular intervals, along the open stretches of coast-valley roads, willows and sycamores near streams, sycamores, bays and broad-leaved maples on more conventional roadways approaching towns, native palms and mesquites in Southern California.

MISTAKE, BUT WORKED WELL

Unintentionally Friendly Letter to Bullet-Proof Debtor Brought Quick Results From Him.

A lawyer who had drifted out of the regular line into a collection practice dictated so many dunning letters every day that he had his stenographer sign them and would himself read over the carbon copies the following day if he thought it necessary. He had another bad habit, which was that as it came to the close of a day and he had become weary of nagging people he would grow facetious and instead of dictating the names of the debtor properly would vary the monotony by saying "Dearest Skin" or "Darling Mr. Smith," knowing that his stenographer, having the correspondence before her, would fill in the proper name.

It chanced that she, like most good stenographers, decided to get married, and she brought her sister into the office to succeed her. The first full day of dictation that the attorney put in after the sister's advent chanced to be one of his humorous ones, and he started a letter to a bullet-proof debtor named Samuel Smith "Dear Sammy," and then proceeded to tell Sammy his opinion of him. The next morning, on looking over the carbon copies, he was horrified to find the new stenographer had typed that letter exactly as it was dictated and sent it out in the mail the night before.

All that day the attorney expected Mr. Samuel Smith to show up with fire in his eye and a pistol in his hand. He shivered when the office door opened and he left for home very early in the afternoon. The next morning, however, he received a letter from "Sammy," which started off "Dear Billy" (the lawyer's given name being William), and which went on to say, "If you had addressed me in such friendly style before you would have had the money sooner," and inclosed was "Sammy's" check for the whole account.

The new method had brought gratifying results, but the attorney did not dare to adopt it as a regular practice; on the contrary, his dictation since has been notable for its extenuation.

Nettles as Substitute for Cotton.

The search for a cotton substitute has been going on in Europe for a long time, and many experiments have been made with the common nettle, which has been a promising plant on account of the strength of its fiber and its ready growth under the most discouraging conditions, with a large yield per acre. The great difficulty has been in separating the fiber from the woody stem. In a method of treatment that has been worked out in the last two or three years, the dried nettle stems are boiled about half an hour in dilute soda lye, and the loosened fibers are then separated in a machine with revolving brushes. The material is then subjected to a number of alternate boilings in dilute lye and thorough washings, both under high pressure. The product is a mass of yellowish fibers, free from gum, that can be bleached, combed, and spun into lustrous white yarn. This is claimed to have the smoothness and softness of flax, with a strength even greater than that of hemp. The yarn has been made into brilliant damask, and can be used—alone or with other threads—for upholstery, ribbons, and a variety of fabrics.

Year's Sleep in Prison.

A remarkable case of lethargy is reported from one of the towns in South Russia. A certain Molisevinko was put on his trial in March of last year on the charge of having committed an armed robbery, but in the midst of the proceedings he dropped to the floor in what was supposed at the time to be a fainting fit, but which afterward proved a lethargic sleep.

In this condition the prisoner has lain till March 8 of the present year. He has evidently been all the time in complete possession of his wits, but was unable to move a limb, open his eyes or take food. When his eyelids were raised the pupils could be seen, and he was all the time fed by artificial means.

During his sleep he has lost some weight, but he has kept throughout the external appearance of a man in normal and healthy sleep.

Titanic as a Synonym for Large.

Marion made it a practice to use all the new words she heard of in sentences. The other night she was listening while her mother read of the disaster of the Titanic.

"Mother," she said, "what does Titanic mean?"

"Titanic," her mother replied, "means very large, or big."

Marion was thoughtful for a minute. Then turning to her mother she said:

"I can use it in a sentence."

"How?" asked her mother.

"The Titanic ship hit an iceberg Titanicer than itself," said Marion.

Justified.

Judge—What have you to say for yourself for beating this man in such a brutal manner?

Prisoner—Your honor, he asked me if my name was Ismay.

Judge—Discharged.

Laces and Malines Daintily Handled by the Milliner

WHEN the millinery designer once understands how to use these airy fabrics (whose description merits verse, rather than prose) we are refreshed with delightful examples of her art. Both malines and laces must be managed by an artist; for commonplace designing cannot harmonize with such exquisite products of the loom. These wonderful materials have no reason for existence except in the realm of beauty. They are woven with this idea in mind. They provide the field in which the fancy of those who make fabrics, may allow itself to play, borrowing from flowers, birds, clouds, its inspiration. Maline is not as fragile as it looks, although it is fragile. Like many other fabrics it has been water-proofed so that moisture does not kill it. It is not meant for daily wear. Maline has come into great prominence lately as a substitute for the heron egret, whose passing is but a matter of time.

There are laces that are very substantial, as well as those which are almost too delicate to use. This is the day of laces and the fashionable varieties are seen everywhere—gowns, coats and hats, whether for the promenade or indoor wear, are bedecked with lace. They are usually applied flat to another fabric. But the lighter varieties, such as val, point de esprit, mechin, etc., are worn in narrow platings and ruffles. There is a future for cluny, especially in lingerie gowns and hats, and on undermuslins. And there are many heavy novelty laces for coats and gowns and for hats, that look well placed on those substantial garments made for daily wear. Therefore street hats, even of the most mannish outlines, are fittingly banded with graceful lace patterns. The two hats shown here are excellent examples of the way in which maline and lace are used in the hands of the artist in millinery.

GLOVES THAT CAN BE WASHED

Preparation Guaranteed to Cleanse Chamois and Doeskin if Not Too Badly Soiled.

Duck's foot yellow is the accepted color in glove wear for the morning, and is worn irrespective of a "match" with the gray whipcord and sponge coat and skirt costumes that are issuing now from the smartest tailors.

Doeskin and chamois gloves of washable propensities are models liked by many women, and are procurable in all lengths from the one or two buttons or mound snaps to the 15 button length.

A recipe that is said to be good for washing chamois and doeskin gloves is as follows: Make a good lather with soap powder or jelly and tepid water, and add a tablespoonful of ammonia to each quart of water. The gloves should then be put into a basin and be left to soak for about a quarter of an hour. They should be squeezed and pressed with the hands, but on no account wrung.

Rinse in fresh tepid water, to which a few drops of ammonia have been added, then press in a clean towel and pull into shape. After this hang them in the air or near an open window until dry.

Banded Coats.

Banded coats promise to be extremely smart during the spring season. A number of the inevitable white serge suits seen at the southern resorts have the hall mark of the moment impressed upon them by belted effects. One of these is effectively relieved by clusters of tiny black buttons and revers and cuffs of suede colored cloth, a narrow black patent belt encircling the waist. Again, in the case of a Shantung suit in such an artistic shade as dull apricot, the band was of the silk, very deep and permanently attached.

But there are all kinds of diversities of the belt, and for that reason alone we are bound to see the style later in the season.

Waistcoat of Feathers.

The latest use to which French women have put bird's plumage is to make it into snug, warm waistcoats which are worn under smart, tailor made coats. The more brilliant the plumage the more effective of course, and very often a toque composed of the same kind of feathers is worn also.

Though several of these gilets oiseaux have been seen in the Bois they are not likely to become very popular, as they are difficult to make and very expensive.

Norfolk and Blazers.

Norfolk and blazers are now being shown by practically all the large retailers throughout the country, says the Drygoods Economist. The popularity of outdoor sports is constantly on the increase, and a short coat to be worn on such occasions is almost a necessity for women who indulge in such outdoor exercises as tennis, golf, etc.

CAMISOLE

This is a dainty little camisole cut with a deep "V" at top, which is trimmed at edge by beading edged with lace; ribbon is threaded through beading and narrow tucks are made below. The fullness at lower part is tucked, then set to a narrow band which connects it to the basque. The little puffed sleeve is finished off with a lace frill.

Materials required: One and one-half yard 36 inches wide, 1 1/4 yard beading, two yards ribbon, 2 1/4 yards lace.

Working for Baby.

The wooden ribbon disc may be used as a basis for the reel needed for baby's lingerie runners. Having pasted white satin of the correct size over the edge of the reel, trim the two flat surfaces with circles of cardboard, but a half inch larger than the foundation, first covering them smoothly on one side with white or cream satin and then gluing their under sides to the flat surfaces of the wooden reel. When perfectly dried, the girl who wields a paint brush may decorate the satin surfaces with representations of cherubs, or, if she hand-embroiders expertly, with sprays of fine flowers.

Attractive Tray.

An artistic tray may be made at home from an old mirror or picture frame. In the case of a mirror, remove the mercury-covered glass and replace with a plain one. Cover the board that fits behind the glass with a piece of flowered or figured cretonne or rich-looking tapestry. Put the board in place and over the back of it tack a piece of felt, which will prevent the tray from scratching any table upon which it might be placed. Get two brass handles at the hardware store, screw them on the ends of the tray. It is then ready for use.

Camping on His Trail

By BRYANT C. ROGERS

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Miss Abigail Jones, spinster of thirty-eight, had her own little home in the village of Dawson. Almost every day of her life, after passing the age of twenty-five, she had been met with the query:

"Now, Abigail, why don't you marry some nice man and have a home that is a home?"

Every man and woman knows that to marry there must be a man and a woman. Here was the woman, but where was the man? Abigail wasn't so very homely, and she wasn't so very gawky. Worse looking women than she were getting married every day. Up to the old maid age a young man occasionally looked her way, but not with serious intentions. After that period she was left alone. It wasn't a fair, square deal by a woman, but no one appeared to be directly to blame for it. Dawson was a sleepy old village, seldom visited by outsiders, and when a widower or bachelor took a notion to marry he headed some other way.

Abigail was patient as a girl, and she was patient as an old maid. She had read that all things come to the man who waits; and she couldn't see why it didn't apply to a woman as well. What should come to her was a husband. But there was no telling when he would appear. Things were placid and monotonous when a tin peddler came along one day to stir up the calm waters. He had sold Abigail a basin and a wash dish, and they had talked about it's being a poor year for corn, when he asked:

"How comes it that you are not married?"

"Just happens so," was the reply.

"It isn't right. You are entitled to a husband as much as any other woman."

"But if I'm not asked to marry?"

"Um! Um! He don't come along, eh?"

"Hasn't yet."

"But it isn't right."

"Well?"

"Look here, woman," said the peddler as he took a seat on the wash-this life-long custom into a cooked hat."

"You can't mean—?"

"But I do! Put on your hat and walk over there this afternoon and size him up. If you like the looks of him camp on his trail."

"Mercy, man!"

"Ask him for his heart and hand."

Why not? Tell him that you love him as no woman ever loved a man before, and that life will be a dreary desert without him. I got that off to the girl who is now my wife. Nine men out of ten do. Why shouldn't it be turned about? If he don't return your love—if he says that you are too late, and that his heart has been given to another, there's no great harm done. I got the knockout punch twice before I was made happy. Men never die of these things, and a woman won't. It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all."

"But what will folks say—what will they say?" gasped Abigail, as the peddler arose to depart.

"But if you get a husband through it? Woman, rise to the occasion. Give the world and your sex a new deal just as I did when I brought out the dishpan with two ears. People said the world was not ready for the chance, but we know it was. You may travel for a year now and not find a one-eared dishpan. Think it over. Good-day."

It was not that afternoon, but the next, that Abigail Jones appeared at the Bascomb farm. Farmer Thomas was working in the fields, and half an hour after her arrival he came to the house for a drink of water and found her sitting on the steps. She introduced herself and said she was resting after a walk. Mr. Thomas sat down beside her, and they chatted for half an hour, and he gathered her a bouquet when she departed. She intimated that she might call again. Why not? She liked the looks of Mr. Thomas. As she walked homeward she thought to herself that he would make a very good husband.

One day, a week later, as Mr. Thomas was hoeing corn, Miss Abigail made her appearance in the field. She had taken a walk for the purpose of gathering materials for a dandelion tonic. Mr. Thomas hung up his hoe on the limb of a crabapple tree and assisted her, and then they sat down and talked. She drew him out on this and that question. Men do the same thing with a woman. They want to know if she can sew and darn and patch and cut over. They want to know if she is a good cook and if she can cut carpet rags and put up pickled beehives.

Miss Abigail found Farmer Thomas up to her ideal. True, he had too many whiskers, but a little diplomacy and a safety razor would fix that after marriage. Perhaps one of the best things she drew from him in an hour's talk was the assertion that he never had to have an alarm clock in the house to get up by. That showed ambition and industry. He was not the man to be snoring away while the hogs were squealing for their breakfast.

The spinster didn't hustle things too fast. Many a man has lost a good wife by his impetuosity in courting. She had walked out to the Thomas farm at least ten times before the crucial moment arrived. She had grown bolder and bolder with each visit. That is, she had come to realize more and more that she was only giving herself a square deal. And when the moment arrived she was ready for it. She walked out to the farm to find Mr. Thomas mixing the dough for a loaf of bread. He was making a botch of it, and it gave her the courage to say:

"Ezekiel, you must know my feelings towards you. I love you, and hope that I have inspired the same sentiment in your heart. If you wish to make me the happiest woman in the world say that you'll be mine."

And Mr. Thomas rubbed the wet dough off his fingers on the roller towel and put his arms around her and replied:

"I'll be hanged if I won't!"

Talk? Of course there was talk! They said that Abigail camped on his trail; that she had run him down; that she had scared him into it. Oh, yes, they talked and talked and talked and rolled up their eyes, but Abigail had a husband and Mr. Thomas had a wife, and it was a happy marriage.

To Treat Umbrellas.

Umbrellas require a good deal of attention to keep them in good condition, and how few of them get it. After the umbrella has been out in the rain it should not be thrust in the umbrella stand and left to drain, for in this position the moisture gradually accumulates in the silk just above the ferrule and causes it to rot. The umbrella should be opened and placed in an airy room until thoroughly dry.

When finally put away it should be left unrolled, for if constantly kept tight the creases rapidly wear through. It is exposing an umbrella to an early death to place it in the rack at all, and a hastily set down stick is likely to put a hole in it; far better to hang it by the handle.

Play Versus Work.

Hub (arriving home)—Well, did you go to the dentist's and have that bridge work done?

Wife—No, dear. Mrs. Swift called and we spent the afternoon in bridge play.

The Goat.

Miggs—Your wife doesn't seem to like me.

Riggs—Naturally! You're the man I always lay the blame on when I am detained downtown.

BOOKS THAT THE BOYS ENJOY

Philadelphia Press Makes Denial That Children of Today Are Wiser Than Parents Were.

An English trade publication, after a prolix and profitless discussion of the risks of issuing juvenile literature, makes this portentous statement: "The simple fact is this—children today are wiser than their parents were. They don't want Robinson Crusoe or Alice in Wonderland. They are up to the head and ears in the immortal while their parents are reverting with delight to the immortal books they scorn."

We doubt that, says the Philadelphia Press. A healthy boy wants and enjoys a boy's books. Jules Verne wrote them for him; so did Henty, by the score, so did Noah Brooks. The beauty about the boy is that his literary taste—if he is properly reared—matures with his years. He cannot be always tied to apron strings; he escapes from the Swiss Family Robinson to the search for Treasure Island; presently his adolescent eye widens to the clattering hoofs of "The Three Musketeers." Then, as he has aged he has sagged; in the words of Robert Louis Stevenson himself, "he takes horse with D'Artagnan." Thenceforth he may open with impunity the pages of Virgilian Puerilities.

Meanwhile his parents have re-traced their steps. They are reading again with astonished minds the classics of their childhood. They see amazing beauties, forgotten or unperceived. They are harking back. They are boys again.

INGENIOUS FISH-LINE REEL

Spool Not Only Rotates, But Performs Eccentric Gyration—Does Not Tangle in Winding.

This gyrotory reel is so named because the spool not only rotates, but performs eccentric gyrations, the purpose of which is to cross-wind the line so that it cannot tangle, says the Popular Mechanic. It is applying to the reel the winding principle employed in winding a ball of twine by hand, and it cross-winds the line without the aid of hand or a complicated spool. When the line is being cast, no part of the reel is in motion except the spool itself.

One Worm After Another.

A state superintendent of schools was recently examining a class of girls in natural history. "Tell me the names of animals you know," he began; but the faces of the children expressed bewilderment at the request. At length, however, a little girl at the back of the class shot up her hand as though a bright idea had suddenly struck her. "Ah," said the questioner, "the smallest girl in the class knows. Well, my dear, what is it?" "A worm," came the triumphant answer. "Well—er—yes a worm is really an animal but can no one think of any other?" Again profound silence reigned. "If I were one of you big girls," the superintendent remarked after a pause, or seeing the same hand held up, "I should be ashamed of myself." Then turning to the little scholar, as a last resort: "Well, what is it this time my girl?" "Another worm, Mister," was the quick response.

Oil on Troubled Waters.

"Pouring oil on the troubled waters" as a quotation is hundreds of years old, but it is only recently that it has been actually adopted as a means for calming real storms on the ocean. Within the last few months many of the seamen who navigate our own great lakes have begun to carry oil in bags on their vessels. These bags will be hung over the sides of the ship and the oil will be allowed to dribble out slowly and form a coating over the surface of the water. Its effect is to prevent the breaking of the waves converting the sea into long, smooth swells.

Neckties of Wood.

A syndicate comprising English capitalists has been formed to promote the sale of "tie silk" composed of 50 per cent. wood pulp and 50 per cent. artificial silk. Samples are being submitted to the New York wholesale neckwear manufacturers, and considerable experimenting is taking place. In point of price this material shows advantage over conventional fabrics. Its luster, feel and general appearance closely resemble genuine silk.

Would Have Given Warning.

Papa—"I hear you have been a bad girl today and had to be spanked."

Small Daughter—"Mamma is awful strict. If I'd a known she used to be a school teacher, I'd a told you not to marry her."

WIFE'S HEALTH RESTORED

Husband Declared Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Would Restore Her Health, And It Did.

Ashland, Ky. — "Four years ago I seemed to have everything the matter with me. I had female and kidney trouble and was so bad off I could hardly rest day or night. I doctored with all the best doctors in town and took many kinds of medicine but nothing did any good until I tried your wonderful remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My husband said it would restore my health and it has."

Mrs. MAY WYATT, Ashland, Ky.

There are probably hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read What Another Woman says: Camden, N. J. — "I had female trouble and a serious displacement and was tired and discouraged and unable to do my work. My doctors told me I never could be cured without an operation, but thanks to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I am cured of that affliction and have recommended it to more than one of my friends with the best results."

—Mrs. ELLA JOHNSTON, 324 Vine St.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Slightly Selfish. Howell — Is he a public-spirited man? Powell — You can judge for yourself; he says that he cares not who cures the ill of the country if he can get the doctors' fees.

One Way. "I'd like to make that proud man bite the dust." "Then why don't you get your maid to sweep the pavement some morning when he's coming along?"

A Plato! By His Logic. "What will the woman of tomorrow be?" sighed the pensive person. "Oh, a year or two younger than she is today," replied the one who had reasoned such things out.

Another Definition. "Pa, what is an optimist?" "An optimist, my boy, is a woman who thinks that everything is for the best, and that she is the best." — Judge.

Many a woman is moved to tears when it isn't her move.

Hundred and Sixty Pounds. Jack — What did her father say when he entered the parlor and found his plump daughter sitting in your lap? Tom — He remarked that I had taken a great deal on myself.

Oversteering. Many a man spoils his fiancée standing while trying to enable his daughter to live in a style which will give him the right to demand big promises from her suitors.

Bushranging Days in Australia

PUBLIC LIBRARY, MELBOURNE

A COUNTRY spacious and sparsely inhabited. A land where men found gold or reared cattle. A remote part of the world into which Dame Fashion dare not penetrate. And above all, a domain dominated by the terrible bushranger. Such was my earliest conception of it which still obtains in the minds of thousands of British people.

And how different is the reality! The country certainly is spacious and sparsely inhabited. Men also get gold and rear cattle, but not as once they did. The days of finding are over. And as for Dame Fashion—alas, she is too much in evidence. She is more audacious here than anywhere else, except it be Paris.

But it is of the bushranger that I propose to write; the bushranger who was even as late as thirty years ago, but who now no longer exists, writes F. C. Spurr in the Montreal Weekly Herald. The swaggering villain of the time-honored novel who entered an Australian bar and "held up" proprietor and patrons and having robbed them took to the road again—he has ceased to be.

A lecturing engagement took me to Beechworth, amongst the hills. There I found our enchanting country full of natural wealth and beauty; a place hidden from the eyes of the crowd, but sought by tired town-dwellers, who, weary of dust and noise aspire after a period of repose in a spot where the air is a veritable elixir of life, and where the earth laughs with flowers and fruits. High as is Beechworth, oranges and lemons grow there.

But despite its attractions, the town is beginning to die. This is the tragedy of Australia—that small towns which were called into existence through the finding of gold begin to perish as soon as the gold is exhausted. The mines are closed down, the miners depart, shopkeepers lose their patrons, and they, too, are compelled to put up the shutters.

Gold and bushrangers? There is an affinity between the two. But for the presence of the one, the others would not have come into existence. Beechworth was once the center of the operations of the most desperate gang of bushrangers Australia has ever known.

The Kelly Gang. I heard the story from the lips of the "oldest inhabitant," a vigorous old Scotsman who has passed his eighty-fourth year, and who retains a clear memory and a youthful spirit. He was one of the magistrates who tried the members of the terrible "Kelly gang." He pointed out the place where stood the prison in which the precious scoundrels were incarcerated.

With pride he conducted us to a rock which is named after him—Ingram's rock—from which we obtained a marvelous panorama of a hilly country extending many miles in every direction. And there, deep down in the dell, lay caves and other hiding places in which the thieves found shelter from the harassing police and soldiery. We stood in the heart of the bushrangers' country.

The story of that time when told today makes the flesh shiver. As we surveyed the beautiful landscape and shared the deep tranquility of hill and dale, we found it difficult to believe that only thirty years ago this country-side was at the mercy of three or four desperadoes, who kept the inhabitants in a state of continual terror. Three or four men—Irishmen—armed with guns and revolvers, raided where they pleased, killed whom they pleased, and lived as they pleased. Soldiers, and police alike were felled by them, and when they were at last taken, it was more by accident than design. Dick Turpin, so far as England is concerned, belongs to a past age.

Don Quixote may be still wandering in some gully or other amongst the Spanish mountains. But that a small band of Irishmen should at the end of the nineteenth century and upon British territory continue the exploits of the old-world is almost incredible.

The father of the Kellys—for such was the name of the gang—was an Irishman and a Roman Catholic who came over from the Emerald Isle with the reputation of being an "informant."

His son Ned—the "terror" of the gang—was a handsome young fellow, who, with his brothers, found it much easier to live upon the produce of other people than to work honestly for his own living. He became a professional cattle-stealer, was caught and imprisoned.

Released from goal, he threw off all restraint and took to the bush as a robber. Bushrangers had been common for many years, but at last the race was beginning to thin out. The Kellys determined to revive the glory of the ancient times.

The country around Beechworth afforded them excellent cover, while the towns and scattered houses and stations offered them as much plunder as they desired. A murder was the signal for departing from civilization and taking to the adventures of the bush. Despite the fact that the country-side was alarmed, and that the police were scouring the country in search of the outlaws, these last continued their robbing profession with almost unbelievable coolness.

One day they entered the National bank at Euroa at a time when many of the inhabitants of the town were at a funeral. They were well dressed, with no suggestion of the outlaw about them. Covering the clerks with their revolvers, they demanded all the cash the bank contained, the sum, amounting to nearly $10,000.

They Stopped Nothing. Then, gathering the entire staff of the bank together, they bade the manager harness a horse and prepare a carriage. And there issued from the bank premises a buggy containing the manager with his wife and children, together with a cart containing the robbers and the plunder. All were driven to Faithfull's Creek, where the prisoners were entertained by the thieves until such a time as the latter thought fit to leave them, which they did at nightfall.

The manager of the bank and his family found their way back to the town as best they could. Meanwhile the Kellys were safely hidden in one of their favorite places of concealment. For cool during this exploit has not been surpassed.

They stopped at nothing. When after another murder, the police started in a special train to a place where the Kellys were known to be, the robbers raced across the country to where the train had to pass. They commanded the station-master and afterwards some platelayers to destroy the railway, and so to wreck the coming train. Luckily, however the disaster was averted.

One of the outlaws' prisoners managed to escape and possess himself of a candle, a red scarf, and matches. With these for danger signals, he reached the railway as the train was approaching, and lighting the candle held the red scarf in front of it. The device was successful. The strange light was seen, and the train drew up a few yards away from the place of danger.

Meanwhile, the robbers had achieved the daring business of imprisoning in a large hotel a number of citizens who might have made trouble had they been at liberty. Driven in to the number of sixty-two, they were held at bay by four outlaws, who, by force of arms and reputation, were masters of the situation. The robbers were by this time clad in armor made from stolen plowshares by a local blacksmith.

Head, chest, back and sides were protected by this clumsy metal. Strangely enough, the robbers had not thought of covering their legs, and it was in that vulnerable spot that the chief of the gang was hit.

Despite the rifle fire the outlaws did not yield. One of them, indeed—the leader—managed to escape in the darkness. But reappearing, he was shot in the legs, and his fighting career was over. The other three remained in the house stubbornly refusing to surrender. Then at last the police decided to set fire to the house and either burn out or burn up their enemies.

When the fire subsided, the charred remains of two of the robbers were discovered amidst the ruins of the building. How they died will never be known.

With the passing of the Kelly bushranging practically ceased.

SHYNESS A FORM OF FEAR

Really Due to Excessive Self-Consciousness, and Afflicted One Is True Subject of Pity.

Although shyness, like egotism, may be said to arise from exaggerated self-consciousness, the presence of this elusive and illogical failing in an otherwise normal individual is by no means easy to explain. Shyness is, psychologically, much more nearly related to fear than to shame, says the Lancet. That it does not necessarily proceed from even a sense of moral, mental or physical deficiency, still less from the actual existence of these, is well known, and it is this fact that makes the curious predilection of the malady for certain individuals one of its most aggravating features.

Speaking broadly, we may say that shyness consists essentially in a state of morbid self-consciousness of one's personal characteristics, whether physical or mental, in relation to the opinions of others. There is a certain amount of evidence to show that shyness is hereditary, but however this may be, it is largely a matter of temperament in individuals and finds a fruitful ally in a too active imagination. It is as protean as influenza in the forms in which it betrays its presence, and may exhibit itself in a thousand little gaucheries, which in extreme cases may render the life of its unhappy possessor a burden to him.

"Sins may be forgiven," said Nathaniel Hawthorne—himself a victim of shyness—"but shyness has no forgiveness in heaven or earth." Not infrequently the malady takes the form of excessive rudeness, with the result, it may be, that the most gentle and kind of characters is shunned at all costs as a boor.

This dread affliction is no respecter of persons. Charles Matthews, Garrick and Byron were instances of men who suffered from shyness in their relations to the social life of their time, and there is a well-known author-dramatist of today who, it is understood, suffers tortures from the disease. Sir Isaac Newton was morbidly shy, and had an objection to the publication of his discoveries lest it Famous Manuscripts Sought After.

Manuscripts of famous books of the present time and of the future will probably be of little interest to bibliographers as compared with those of the past, for nearly all book manuscripts are now typewritten, and thus have no special individuality. But the genuine holograph "copy" of the old literary masters is treasured and brings good prices; for example, Sir Walter Scott's "Life of Jonathan Swift," in the original manuscript, with annotations, brought $1,910 at the recent Hoe sale.

Industrious Navajos.

The Navajos, numbering 30,000, live in northern Arizona and northwestern New Mexico. They occupy an area about as large as the state of Pennsylvania, most of which is a desert. Here for centuries they have made their own living by raising sheep and goats. A part of the wool is woven by their industrious, resourceful women into the beautiful and durable Navajo blankets, which promise to become a fair competitor of the imported rug.

Couldn't Stand for Beetle.

A young lion-tamer of Jassy, Roumania, fainted the other day in the cage at a moment when the animals were perfectly quiet. She was removed before they did more than show signs of restlessness, and on recovering consciousness exclaimed: "Until the beetle crawling on one of the bars is taken off I am not going in again!"

"Ballot" and "suffrage" show how language perpetuates the memory of primitive methods. A "ballot" should be a vote taken with balls—one of the various ancient Greek instruments of secret voting. And the word "suffrage," which by some is derived from "suffrago," a knuckle bone or ankle bone, in that case recalls an early method of recording the vote.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable.
 Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

MANY of our people are preparing to go on their summer vacation.
 It is well that they be careful. Each season we experience costly fires that might have been averted, if the travelers had observed The Six Rules as laid down by the Forest Service. The Six Rules are as follows:
 1. Be sure your match is out before you throw it away.
 2. Knock out your pipe ashes or throw your cigar or cigarette stump where there is nothing to catch fire.
 3. Don't build a camp fire any larger than is absolutely necessary.
 Never leave it even for a short time without putting it out with water or dirt.
 4. Don't build a camp fire against a tree or a log. Build a small one where you can scrape away the needles, leaves or grass from all sides of it.
 5. Don't build bonfires. The wind may come up at any time and start a fire you cannot control.
 6. If you discover a fire, put it out if possible; if you can't, get word of it to the nearest U. S. Forest Ranger or State Fire Warden just as quickly as you possibly can.

THE Fourth District, and only district, went dry by a large majority Friday. This was due largely to the efforts of the ladies who had organized a well-working machine and saw to it that their constituents were brought to the polls. As a result of this election about 26 saloons were put out of business and it will now be necessary to go out of the district for the occasional glass. There are those who are not strong enough to resist the temptation which leads to the drink habit and the new law makes it possible to remove the temptation and thereby save the community from a nuisance.

THE County Library which has been agitated over this county for the past several weeks has met with favor in the eyes of the Supervisors and the proposition will be acted upon at the regular meeting of the board in July. If this is carried a slight increase in taxes will be necessary and this will also be considered by the board. Whether or not the library is established will depend largely on the expression of the people to their respective Supervisors. Let them know how you feel on the proposition. Don't leave it for the other fellow and then kick because it wasn't decided your way of thinking.

THE Counties Convention which will be held in San Jose June 21-22 will be a big advertiser for Santa Clara valley. On Saturday afternoon all visitors will take a sightseeing trip about the valley and all vicinities should fix up their places with flags or bunting to make the route attractive. Put on your Sunday clothes. Plans are being formulated to furnish refreshments to the autoists along the route at specified stations. The local Improvement Club is making plans to have one of the stations here and thereby boost our section.

HICKEY! Boys! The Cop! Speeding on Campbell Avenue must be stopped. There are numberless children and adults on the streets at all times and in a fit of fear are just as apt to step in front of a machine as to step away from it. The speed limit is by County Ordinanance 10 miles an hour in town and any one failing to observe the law is subject to a fine. It is not a matter of your pleasure but a matter of the safety of others.

TODAY is Flag Day.
